I absolutely do not agree with the current idea of the clean-up of the Willamette river Super fund.

1. The little % cleaned up and then stored in the river is not an answer.

Removal of toxins should be taken to an appropriate storage site away from the river.

2. The goal should be to return the river to the point of not having an advisory for fish consumption.

3. To expect "natural clean-up" to occur is the same as doing nothing. Where is the toxin going to go, if not ultimately into the water table?

4. Why are the original polluters not being held responsible for the clean-up?

Thank you
